

Seminar: Museum as Social Knowledge Spaces

14 May 2012, 18:00-20:00

Venue: Hong Kong Museum of Medical Sciences

Museums around the world are rethinking their role in society, as changing community needs and digital participation open a whole new dimension for representation of cultural content and interaction between the museum and the user.

Museums, libraries, and archives, both public and private, are places of interaction and engagement with knowledge; they are not only memory institutions, recording cultural and intellectual legacy for future generations, but also contribute directly to our current social life and well-being.

We would like to invite you to an informal knowledge-sharing session with representatives from the cultural sector to discuss how museums in Hong Kong could become more interactive and open spaces, engaging and inspiring users.

If you wish to join, please email: seminars@knowledgedialogues.com

Seminar fee: 100HK$, payable cash at the door.

This seminar is part of a series of public events on the role of museums in knowledge societies. For more information please visit www.knowledgedialogues.com
